What are Speech, Language and Communication Needs?

Speech

Pronunciation Fluency Voice

Language

Speaking and understanding, reading and writing, sign language

How does SLCN affect my child?

Speech, Language and Communication Needs (SLCN) describes difficulties across one or many aspects of communication including:

- problems with producing speech sounds accurately
- stammering
- \rightarrow voice problems, such as hoarseness and loss of voice
- problems understanding language (making sense of what people say)
- → problems using language (words and sentences)
- → problems interacting with others. For example, difficulties understanding the non-verbal rules of good communication or using language in different ways to question, clarify or describe things.

These may be thing you have noticed at home as well as at school.

Communication

Social use of language, how we interact with other people

The impact of SLCN

5% of pupils with identified SLCN achieved the expected standard in reading, writing and mathematics at the end of primary school of children with emotional and behavioural disorders have unidentified language difficulties

60% of young offenders have low language skills

Speech and Language UK

https://speechandlanguage.org.uk/